

Everyone deserves a second chance.

Not only those you work with, or the people in your family, but you too.

A second chance when you feel an opportunity has passed you by. Yet you're still looking for a way to make a difference.

A second chance because you believe in you.

At nearly 40 years old, Robert Frost had not published a single book of poetry.

He had so much to say, yet suffered rejection letters time and time again.

In 1912 he made a life changing decision; a decision for a second chance.

He sold his farm in New Hampshire to make a fresh start in London.

Four years later, The Road Not Taken was published.

This work was not just about a walk in the woods, but a thoughtful poem that discusses the nature of choice... about how we take one direction rather than another.

And about how we ultimately feel about the direction we did and did not take.

The Road Not Taken by Robert Frost

Two roads diverged in a yellow wood,
And sorry I could not travel both
And be one traveler, long I stood
And looked down one as far as I could
To where it bent in the undergrowth;
Then took the other, as just as fair,
And having perhaps the better claim,
Because it was grassy and wanted wear;
Though as for that the passing there
Had worn them really about the same,

And both that morning equally lay
In leaves no step had trodden black.
Oh, I kept the first for another day!
Yet knowing how way leads on to way,
I doubted if I should ever come back.
I shall be telling this with a sigh
Somewhere ages and ages hence:
Two roads diverged in a wood, and I--
I took the one less traveled by,
And that has made all the difference.

Take a risk.

Forget regret.

Give yourself a second chance.

Too many people go to their graves with their music still in their hearts.
